the 3 TYPES OF THREADING we produce

In the broom and mop industry, the threading of the handle is a fundamental element, as it ensures compatibility, stability, and ease of use. The existence of different threading standards stems from the historical evolution of national markets and from the different usage habits in various countries.

Our company has chosen to specialize mainly in three types of threading:

ITALIAN

Italian threading is characterized by a wider pitch and a robust thread. It is highly appreciated for its strength and ease of screwing, and it is widely used in the Italian market and in several Mediterranean countries.

GERMAN

German threading features a finer and more precise pitch. This type ensures a very stable coupling between the handle and the tool head and is typical of Central and Northern European markets, where high long-term reliability is required.

FRENCH

French threading stands halfway between the other two: it offers compatibility and versatility characteristics that make it particularly common in the French market and in neighboring countries.
